On a hilltop in Roca Verde, behind a stone-pillared wall and an electric gate, this single-level estate looks out over the Central Valley. You can see San José and the mountains during the day, and the city lights at night. The Great RoomThe home is built around one large great room. A vaulted tongue-and-groove wood ceiling with exposed beams rises above wide porcelain tile floors laid on the diagonal. At the far end, a wall of glass sliding doors topped with clerestory windows frames the pool, the gardens and the mountains, and opens fully onto the covered terrace. The space easily holds a formal dining table for ten, a full living area and a kitchen island with seating, and it still feels open. The KitchenThe kitchen sits under the same wood ceiling, with pendant lights over a large peninsula with granite countertops. It has charcoal shaker base cabinets, soft-gray uppers, a white subway-tile backsplash and a full wall of floor-to-ceiling pantry cabinets. Appliances are stainless steel, including a gas range, dishwasher and French-door refrigerator, and a window over the sink looks out to the garden. W
